Over the past 2 decades, the UAE's economic diversification program has led to the rise of several non-oil sectors that now make up a significant percentage of the UAE's GDP.

Diversification of GDP

The UAE adopts a diversified economy where non-oil sectors including trade, industry, transport, real estate, information, technology and science as well as advanced service sectors such as education and health account for 70% of the total GDP. In 1971, the oil sector's share in the GDP amounted to 90%; However, over the last fifty years, its contribution has been lost, thanks to the economic diversification strategies adopted by the country. Currently, the oil sector contributes to 30% of the total GDP.

Sectorial Distribution

The UAE is successful in its strategy to diversify its economy. Today, it is transforming into a new economy – one that is based on knowledge and innovation. The following data illustrates the level of diversity in the country's productive structure and the importance of various economic activities in the GDP. The wholesale and retail trade and vehicles sector accounts for the largest share of the GDP, followed by the construction and building sector, then manufacturing sector and transportation and storage sector, in equal proportions.
